

Image suyashdixit (Pixabay)

Translated by Viviane

The jets of water gushing out from the mouth of the merlion, which exudes a certain type of extraordinary aura, shoot into the water surface as they make crystal clear splashes. The statue stands upright by the harbor with its beautiful mermaid tail and welcomes visitors from all over the world, as if it is towering from the other side of the sea. This is the Merlion Park in Singapore, the most well-known park in the country. Although the smallest park in Singapore, it is also the most famous attraction that one must see while visiting Singapore. Singapore is just like Merlion Park. It is small in size, but it definitely has its place in Asia.

The country not only has numerous magnificent attractions, but also continues to attract visitors thanks to its comprehensive urban planning, excellent public security and many other advantages. The Economist's Safe Cities Index 2021 ranks Singapore at No. 3 in the world in its comprehensive evaluation. The safety of the city makes travelers here feel at ease.

In investment, Schrodgers, a globally renowned investment company, ranks more than 900 cities around the world based on their impact on the environment, economy, innovation, and transport, and the results are published as the Global Cities Index. In its latest edition, Singapore stands out from other cities in the world, ranking at No. 11, moving up 2 places from last year, and No. 3 in Transport Impact. In addition, according to fDi Intelligence, an institution under Financial Times in the UK, Singapore claims the No. 1 spot for the fourth year in a row in the latest issue of fDi's Global Cities of the Future 2021/22. The ranking is based on the city's strength, future development potential and investment, as well as other factors. Hence, Singapore has always been a key city to which global investors continue to pay attention.

Known as the Garden City, Singapore's limited area has been a major challenge for its development. Singapore used to be a weedy swamp, but with careful planning and hard work, it has become a model of urban planning and design. The high green coverage ratio in the city is perfectly represented in the process of economic development, while the city-state still coexists peacefully with nature. No matter from what perspective you wish to explore, Singapore is a psychedelic city worth visiting again and again and feeling its unique charm.