

Image Focuszaa (pixabay)

Translated by Viviane

Sturdy trunks tower into the clouds and the treetops are blooming like fireworks with artificial forest shuttling among the city's streets. Strings of color lights illuminate, adding a certain mysteriousness to Supertree Grove creating an aura of technology. It is not only a representative tourist attraction of Singapore, but is also a significant landmark that fully reflects its garden city image. The appearance of the city state as a significant landmark. Singapore, as a city state, has grown to be the most advanced country, making it impossible to ignore it with the most compact area of land. Despite booming development, it still co-exists with nature, adding to the gorgeousness and prosperity of the garden city. This is borne out in the hit comedy, Crazy Rich Asians.

The Heritage Foundation's Index of Economic Freedom of 2022 places Singapore at the top of the list for three consecutive years, ranking it first in economic freedom out of all 184 global economies. The excellent business environment has made Singapore very competitive, and many of the world's 500 enterprises have set up their headquarters there. It thus has attracted many talented people to settle down there. The IMD World Talent Ranking 2021 report ranks Singapore 12th in the world and 2nd in Asia, after Hong Kong, obviously displaying Singapore's business attraction to the world, but its excellent business environment is just one of many dimensions that attract talents.

The global expatriate human resources consultancy ECA International in its latest ranking of livable cities places Singapore at the top of the list for 16 consecutive years. Despite the impact of the pandemic and related measures in recent years, Singapore's performance in terms of international schooling, infrastructure, and housing still remains outstanding. What's more, it's far ahead of other advanced cities and stays on top to become the most livable city.

Singapore is also known as 'Lion City'. It's said that the prince of Sumatra arrived at the island by boat, and as the prince had until then never seen a lion, dubbed it as the 'Lion City'. Today Singapore still lives up to its name as the Lion City, showing its majestic and courageous side to the world as lions do, performing like the majestic king in all spheres, boasting its extraordinary achievements.